Reskill preamble (one breath): Everyone has the ability to be exposed to different things and to appreciate their personal problem solving -- and to celebrate the fact that whatever we're into is pretty important, that life is a gift, and that we are the dominant species because of our intellect and communication complexity--and we should do all to the benefit of the most.

Hands should be cleaned immediately before direct patient contact and immediately after. This can be done with soap and water or alcohol gel using the following technique.

Palm to Palm

Left palm over back of right hand

Palm to palm fingers interlaced

Backs of fingers to opposing palms with fingers interlaced.

Rotational rubbing of right thumb clasped over left palm and left palm over right palm

Rotational rubbing backwards and forwards with clasped fingers of right hand in palm of left and vice versa

Washing should take 15 -30 seconds. Rinse and dry hands thoroughly.
When applying gel, continue technique until hands are dry.

Memetics vs semiotics

Some students of semiotics seem to be irritated by the success of the meme. (e.g. K) be much more popular than memetics, and the term 'sign' seems to be much more popular than the term 'sign'. However, the term 'sign' does appear to have lost some important ground to the term 'meme'. H

Summit Theme and Agenda OCT 16

This year's Summit theme is Learning Together: Fostering A Culture of Sustainability. Join us on October 19 for a day of exploring and deepening your knowledge on a culture of sustainability.

The keynote address is The (Missing) Politics in Environmental and Sustainability Education by Dr. David Orr of Oberlin College.

We'll hear from other speakers as well, including University of Louisville President Dr. Neeli Bendapudi.

The afternoon will feature a facilitated community discussion on Creating the Future in Your Space Through a Culture of Sustainability.

The MudSlinger Hero from the East

Gliding through a library audiobook of a brief history of eastern Europe the other day, I ran into a monster that I think we all can appreciate. No, not Dracula--although he's a monster of some stature from the east of that continent; true. It was Golem, a mud monster called from the deep by a Medieval rabbi whenever yiddish folks were targeted unfairly, as was so often the case back then (accused of hacking children into pieces and such). If you haven't been exposed to Golem, it's high time you were. Probably many common folk are feeling pushed around by forces that don't care about us--and wrongly accuse and bully us--because of pride of place and heritage. The idea of a collective-unconsciousness-based phantasmic humunculus (that does the marauding for us to keep the haughty from being too hubric) is a satisfying one. While I doubt a real Golem will land on the shores of our Ohio River, I'm convinced Portland (with lots of access to water with silt build-up--thanks to our very own lock-and-dam) would be the first place in Louisville for such an oozy and lugubrious landing. Indeed, I posit that a gargantuan Golem would be concocted due to our overabundance of mud, mud, mud...especially since the riverfront forest has been lain waste this last fortnight from 15th on down--and all that remains is mud and homeless encampment residue (and a few lucky remnant sycamores). Since I'm always up for collective mutual support for one another, I propose a modest request: Grab some river mud, form it into something resembling a blob with some backbone, and stick it on your front stoop, porch, step, or walkway for it to dry out and nestle in. Of course, you'll need to cover it with a cardboard box when it rains, but such is the case with all yard art: care and keeping make for happy porch assets. And for those who like to swing for the fences, I suggest that once we get a critical mass of steely-eyed Li'l Golems in Portland, a few daring souls can create a few extra to be placed, with proper incantationing and stealth, on the sidewalk across the street from the Highlands residence of our own Mitch McConmanell. Nothing like putting the fear of Golem into the glib lip-waggers. In a few years' time we might consider investing in a community maker-space, replete with a kiln that can fire the mud monsters into true hardy yard gnomes. According to Wikipedia (and I recommend reading up), all this mythological underpinning will magically produce a will for self-emancipation and the will for resistance. Sounds right up our <muddy> alley. Supernatural creatures should never substitute for taking the time to vote, however.
